The Goldflame Spire is prized for its ability to present color in every season, and withstand the harshest that nature can give out. This is a popular shrub among homeowners. The colorful show starts in spring, with crimson-red new foliage that later fades to yellow, then green. Clusters of small pink flowers arrive in early to mid-summer, and if dead-headed, can produce another flower show in the fall. When cooler temperatures arrive, the foliage turns a stunning coppery bronze before falling to the ground. These shrubs will tolerate most soils, dry or wet, well-drained loam or clay. Maintaining your spirea is as easy as trimming the shrub to mere 3" stubs every few years.
